Pre-Holocene contact between New Zealand and Chile via "rafting."

Abstract

The history of a domesticated marine macroalga is studied using archaeological, phylogeographic and population genetic tools.

Phylogeographic and population genetic analyses demonstrated that the cultivated red alga Gracilaria chilensis colonised the Chilean coast from New Zealand. Combining archaeological observations with phylogeographic data provided evidence that exchanges between New Zealand and... See More

Eventually Muslims would have "discovered" the Americas. They actually were closer to doing so prior to the end of the 15th century. Mansa Musa had large navies exploring the Atlantic and Muslim fleets were probing into western Melanesia with the royal family of Ternate converting to Islam in the middle of the 15th century.

How Islam Created The United States of America

With the rise of ISIL (Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant), Boko Haram, and the continuing threat of al-Qaeda and other Islamic terrorist groups, it's all too easy to think of Islam as a religion of hate. Just as the Arab Spring began to cause...

"Incoming Texas Gov. Greg Abbott created a stir last week during a speech to the conservative and influential think tank the Texas Public Policy Foundation, where he accused Texas cities of contributing to the "California-ization" of Texas.

"The truth is, Texas is being California-ized with bag bans, fracking bans, tree-cutting bans," Abbott said. "We're forming a patchwork quilt of bans and rules and regulations that is eroding the Texas model."

New Texas Governor Adds To Tension Between State, City Governments

There's growing tension between the state government and big cities in Texas. Republicans in the statehouse are chaffing at moves by municipal governments in large cities and are crying foul.

I wonder if the resident sea lions in the Delta return to the saltwater or brackish water periodically to restore the natural balance in their skin.

"The tree bears all the spices found at what Jacques le Goff has called the 'oneiric horizon', an orientalist fantasy space east of Eden which promised a cornucopia of luxury goods. [7]

These are the first details of the garden; then the poem describes the red roses that never fade, wells of spiced wine sweetened with honey, balm and medicinal treacle, and healing water, precious stones and gold. Geese fly around advertising themselves, and larks fly into the mouth, already flavoured with cloves and cinnamon. The satire is somewhat accurate: in 1419 the Munden Chantry priests spent 54s.10d. on spices, more than they spent on average for food in a similar period. [8] The Cockayne legend, however, proved to be a much more effective component of capitalist than of feudal ideology."

"The year 1338 was the occasion of a great event in the life of a certain John of Florence, for in December of that year he set out from Avignon on a journey that was to take him, in his capacity of Papal Legate, to the court of the Great Khan of Cathay in Peking. This Franciscan Friar of aristocratic Florentine lineage is best known to us under the name John Marignolli, sometimes Giovanni de' Marignola, and his importance for the history of South-East Asia lies in the fact that, like Marco Polo, he made his return voyage from China not by the Central Asian overland route again but by sea through the Indies and, what is more, though passing through many perils, survived to tell the tale."

"It's true that Wieseltier is a victim of the "disruption" he decries. The power of TNR's owner, Facebook co-founder Chris Hughes, to kick him out of a magazine he helped define reflects the ascendant authority of Silicon Valley and the decay of a certain liberal intellectual elite. But the editor's greater argument is a shallow one, driven by an old fear of change. As technology takes over the world, Wieseltier argues, humanity is "too singular for the Singularity. But are we becoming posthumanists?"

Virgil Mayor Apostol So true, Paul. When I was in Mexico City, one female did not know how to respond to an emotional catharsis that overcame me. She was very, very puzzled because it was not "manly" in their culture. In other words, she, coming from a Hispanized country, was programed to believe in a certain perspective of male dominance and machismo in contrast to her role as a female.

The Ancient Egyptians knew of an "Island of Fire" (Ta-Nesisi or Ta-Neserser) located at "the eastern horizon of heaven" in the "Sunrise Sea," where we find the Elysian Fields known as the Sekhet-Aaru (Field of Reeds).

Intersected by a grid work of canals, the fields produced the divine food of the gods -- food and herbs that filled humans with "magic." Here also was the primeval mount where the Sun and the Bennu Bird rise, and the cataclysmic lake of fire.

Before the Feast

1.5. In reality, hosts and supporters often use feasts to achieve a number of types of benefits for themselves. Although one motive may dominate the organization of a feast, submotives can also be inferred and diagramed with the use of a ternary graph based on three types of motives. Several examples of feast types are placed within this field to illustrate suggested mixes of motives.

Should there be any ethical limits on satire? Not legal limits, but just what we would consider socially acceptable?

"One thing almost no one mentions is the government. And yet, the Valley's origins are deeply tied to government support. The reason there were so many engineers in California in the 1950s and 1960s was because large defense companies had attracted them there. Most of the legendary start-ups that fueled the computer revolution — Fairchild Semiconductor, Intel — got off the ground largely because the military, and later NASA, would buy their products until they became cheap and accessible enough for the broader commercial market. GPS, the technology that now powers the information revolution, was developed for the military."

"Kubla Khan is a poem about Eden, that is to say, about pleasure, and the symbolic statement which it makes is a complicated one, encompassing the primal Eden, pleasure in the fallen world, and the second Eden."

@Xanadu

THE TWO PARADISES IN KUBLA KHAN

By H. W. PIERCE

THE echoes in Kubla Khan of Milton's description of Paradise are well known, and the obvious contrast between these evocations of Paradise and the other imagery of the poem have often been pointed out. What may be less obvious is that the poem evokes not one paradise but two, Paradise Lost and Paradise Restored, and that a great deal of the other imagery of the poem, though not paradisaical, probably issues out of Coleridge's reading and meditation on the theme of the two Paradises. Indeed even their geography plays an important part in the landscape and structure of the poem.

Coleridge's detailed knowledge of the two Paradises, in which he was deeply interested in 1792-6, would have come from three obvious and traditional sources: Milton, who appears in "Religious Musings" as the poet of both Paradises; Ezekiel, the Watchman of Israel with whom Coleridge associated himself by naming his periodical The Watchman; and Saint John, to whose Book of Revelation Coleridge referred in the footnotes to "Religious Musings". A subsidiary source of information would have been Hermet's Sacred Theory of the Earth, that "scientific" version of the Apocalypse which Coleridge once proposed to verify* and which he at one time thought of reformulating in terms of ideas drawn from Erasmus Darwin's. It is possible that he also knew from the British Library the essay by Motolin, De Paradiso Terrestri, prefixed to Bodinus's Governatio Sacra (1700), where the classical river Abora was named as one of the rivers of Eden and its source given in the Geographia Sacra itself as Mount Abner in Assyria.<sup>1</sup>

Milton, Ezekiel, and Saint John give the traditional picture of the first and the second Paradises. Though the physical geography of the first Paradise described in Genesis lacks some features of the restored Paradise of Revelation, and though their sites are widely separated—the first being, on the theory of Junius and Grotius adopted by Milton in Paradise Lost, located in Assyria, and the second on Mount Zion—yet the Christian tradition that the second Paradise was a restoration of the first led to an

"Social networks such as Facebook and Twitter provide us with an unprecedented sense of interconnectedness within the global village. The emergence of the Internet has remarkably bolstered the perception that borders no longer matter. There is also a strong case for the positive effects of globalization on the spread of such universal values as democracy, freedom and human rights

".....GLOBALIZATION and LOCALIZATION are the two main forces that drive the 21st century: the former promotes integration while the latter boosts fragmentation. One of the most important tasks of the global community may be how to harmoniously manage and judiciously cope with these two apparently conflicting and contradicting trends."

I would say that localization promotes autonomy rather than "fragmentation."

2015 could be biggest year ever for tech IPOs

Brace yourself — the next 12 months could be historic for tech IPOs, even by the inflated, reality-proof standards of Silicon Valley. "It could be a very big year," said Paul Bard, director of research for Renaissance Capital, an IPO and electronic...
